Very early this morning, the good folks at the Northwestern Law Review published my article suggesting that the US Trade Representative serve as the lead agency for subsequent international climate change negotiation.

A few hours later, President Obama announced that Todd Stern will serve as his international climate change representative, and work under Hillary Clinton at the State Department.

I still think it's a decent piece, though. I'm not bitter. Nope. Not me.

Cross-posted at the Reality-Based Community: www.samefacts.com