

There once was a coal company,
Which fought cap-and-trade mightily.
"Costs too much," they complained,
"Emissions can't be contained,
Or our profits will face jeopardy."

There once was a scientist (or two),
Whose work couldn't pass peer review:
"It's all cosmic rays,
Or perhaps high-level haze,
Or something else besides plain CO<sub>2</sub>."
