

Those who are interested in Clean Tech, particularly from the investment point of view, will want to take a look at the DSIRE site. Sorry, it doesn't actually have anything to do with the Tennessee Williams play, I just couldn't resist the play on words.

DSIRE stands for Database of State Incentives for Renewables and Efficiency. It's a comprehensive, state-by-state survey of incentives. So if you'd like to know about the twenty or so incentive programs in (say) Rhode Island, or tables and maps of state feed-in tariff programs, this is the place for you.

After all, to paraphrase Blanche Dubois, we have always depended on the websites of strangers.
