

NOAA reported late last week that this March was the warmest since records have been kept (circa 1880). Here's a map of "temperature anomalies" on land, showing where the temperature was warmer or colder than usual:

Note that the biggest deviations are in the arctic, which is the area most sensitive to global climate change. Surface sea temperatures were also above normal.